AZAB'S JOURNEY

Azab is thirteen years old. He lives in Niger, in West Africa, but he doesn't live in a village or a town, and his family doesn't have a house. Azab is a Wodaabe nomad. There are more than 40,000 Wodaabe people in Niger. They live in simple tents, and they travel every two or three days. They follow the rain and move to places with water and grass for their cattle. The cows are very important for the Wodaabe people because cows' milk is their main food. They make yogurt and butter with the milk, and when they are near a village, they sell the milk and buy other food.

Azab can't read or write, and he doesn't go to school. But last month he did an essential job for his family. "I managed my family's herd," said Azab. "I walked with the cows every day. I watched them, and I helped them when they were sick."

Last year Azab's family traveled more than 3,000 kilometers around West Africa. "There was no rain," said Azab. "We went from one place to another place. We didn't find food and we were hungry. It was a very difficult time."
